- Direct questions to AIA Indiana Executive Director Jason Shelley at jshelley@aiaindiana.org or call 317.634.6993.

Awards

Awards will be presented at the 2021 AIA Kentucky/AIA Indiana Convention, Thursday, Sept. 23, at the Seelbach Hilton in downtown Louisville.

All awards – except for the Gold Medal – will be selected by an independent Jury that will include an architect, businessperson, educator, or elected official. The AIA Indiana Board of Directors will approve the decisions.

Edward D. Pierre Award

Named in honor of Edward D. Pierre, FAIA, (1890–1971), who was a crusader for the welfare of children, decent housing for all, peace and progressive urban planning.

Born in Fort Wayne May 22, 1890, he received his bachelor's degree in architecture from the Institute of Technology in 1915, after studying one year at Valparaiso University. He worked in the office of Albert Kahn in Detroit three years before serving in the Army Corps of Engineers in World War I. Following the war, Pierre established a private practice in Indianapolis and associated with George Caleb Wright from 1926-1944. He was the head of his own firm until his retirement in 1944.

An AIA member for 41 years, Pierre served as president of AIA Indiana and was elevated to a Fellow in 1951, for his achievements in design. He served on various State and National AIA committees. He was president of the Architect's Association and the Construction League of Indianapolis, director of Indiana Society of Architects and as an ardent advocate of community planning, he was the founder of the Long Rangers, Inc., an organization of volunteers working for the local, state and national betterment. He was honored for his design work, including Indiana State Library and Historical Building at Tech High School, and known for his passion for helping better his community.

Juliet Peddle Award

Created in 1999, this award is named after the first female registered architect in Indiana. Terre Haute native Juliet Peddle (1899-1979) was the second woman to graduate from the University of Michigan School of Architecture. She worked with Edward H. Clark, Inc, in Chicago and co-founded the Chicago Architectural Women's Forum and edited The Architrave. Peddle returned to Terre Haute and opened her own office in 1939, which she ran for more than 30 years.

Peddle's interest in architecture and local history led her to do a research project of historic buildings and houses for the Vigo County Historical Society. By 1940, she developed an idea for a series of newspaper articles on local historic buildings to enlighten the community about structures which had either been altered or completely removed. When first displayed her 60 pencil sketches were highly praised for their exactness and charm. She decided to limit the scope of her series to buildings built before the Civil War in order to recreate Terre Haute in an earlier era of growth and prosperity.

Juliet Peddle died at the age of 80 in 1979. Juliet Peddle Park in Terre Haute was named in her memory shortly after her death.

Protocol

The Juliet Peddle Award recognizes an individual architect for their strong willingness to pioneer, being successful in breaking new ground, strong devotion and commitment to architecture, display of professionalism and perseverance, and having a kind spirit.

Scholarship

The Indiana Architecture Foundation (IAF) will present a $500 scholarship to the college or school of architecture designated by the AIA Indiana Juliet Peddle Award recipient. The scholarship will be donated in his or her name and will also acknowledge IAF. The value of the scholarship shall be $500.

Walter S. Blackburn Award

Walter S. Blackburn made a courageous but judicious decision in 1963, when armed with an architectural degree from Howard University he returned to his hometown of Indianapolis. It was a time when there were not a lot of prospects for young, black architects, but anyone who knew Blackburn knew his passion for Indianapolis and the arts.

He spent his career designing and giving back to his community. Following his untimely death in 2000, AIA Indiana Board of Directors renamed the Don E. Gibson Award the Walter S. Blackburn Award. It's given annually to a non-architect for his or her service to the community.

Walter first enrolled at Purdue University to study engineering, but then decided to get his architectural degree at Howard, where is where he met Alpha Coles, who became his wife and later business partner. They founded Blackburn Architects in 1981. The couple won national awards for their work, including Grace Apostolic Church, the Indianapolis Artsgarden and former RCA Dome. One of the last projects was the National Underground Railroad Freedom Center in Cincinnati.

Walter was elevated as Fellow of American Institute of Architects in 1990, he received the Distinguished Alumni Award from Howard University and AIA Indiana's Edward Pierre Award. In addition to being a leader in the local, state and national AIA, he was a member of the Indiana Arts Commission and on several local arts organizations and nonprofits.

Protocol

The AIA Indiana Distinguished Firm Award may be presented to only one firm in any given year. A firm is eligible to receive the award again after 10 years. "Member Firm" is defined for purposes of this award to be a firm which has at least one principal/owner who is an AIA Indiana member.

Tony Costello Young Architect Award

The Young Architect Award was created in 2010 and renamed the Tony Costello Young Architect Award in 2021, in honor of Costello's dedication to students and emerging professionals. The award honors a registered AIA Indiana architect - who is 40 or younger – for his or her exceptional accomplishments and contributions to the profession.

A native New Yorker, Tony Costello, FAIA, is Irving Distinguished Professor Emeritus of Architecture at Ball State University School of Architecture, a title he received after retiring in 2005, after teaching for more than 50 years. Costello continues to teach Socially Responsible Planning and Design in The Third World, where his focus is strengthening concrete masonry construction in Haiti.

Costello also is principal of C+A COSTELLO + ASSOCIATES, a one-man, architecture and urban design firm he founded in Muncie in 1976. He has won numerous design awards and has been recognized as one of the national pioneers in community-based, urban planning and design education. He founded the Community-Based Projects Program in 1969, and in 1980, founded the Muncie Urban Design Studio (MUDS) and Small-Town Assistance Program. Combined, these programs have won more than 35 awards for student and public education as well as urban design, affordable housing and historic reservation. Among these, two of the most prestigious awards were received in 2002 from the ACSA recognizing Ball State as one of the three oldest, continuous, university-based, urban design studios in the country and Sandi Servaas Memorial Award from the Indiana Landmarks Foundation for MUDS's role in preserving and adaptively reusing Muncie's Historic Wilson School.

Costello was elevated to Fellow in 2001, has served on its national board from 2005-2008, chaired the AIA 150 Blueprint for America from 2006-2008, and was the first-ever recipient of AIA Indiana's Gold Medal in 2012. He is the 2021 AIA Ohio Valley Region Representative to the College of Fellows.

Protocol

Nominations will be judged on their proficiency and accomplishments in the architecture profession. The submission must include at least a resume and personal vita. The submission should address the reasons why the nominee best represents the qualities espoused by the award.

AIA Indiana Gold Medal Award

The highest honor AIA Indiana awards annually is the Gold Medal, which recognizes an AIA Indiana for significant accomplishments and contributions in promoting the highest ideals of the architectural profession. These accomplishments and contributions may have been made in advancing aesthetic, scientific and/or practice components of the profession. It may also be awarded to a member – living or deceased - who has achieved a distinguished career in specific, critical aspects of the profession such as historic preservation sustainability, and urban design and planning. Likewise, it may also recognize contribution to: professional education and service; critical discourse and publications; and research and development. It may be awarded to those who exemplify many years of service to society through significant involvement and leadership in the AIA or allied professional associations (NCARB / CSI / LEED) at the national, state, and/or section levels. Finally, it may recognize exemplary service to significant voluntary endeavors that promote the highest ideals of service to society on an international, national or local scale.

Past Recipients

2012 Tony Costello, FAIA
2013 Ewing Miller, II, FAIA
2014 Wayne Schmidt, FAIA
2015 James T. Kienle, FAIA
2016 Evans Woollen, FAIA (awarded posthumously)
2017 Lynn Molzan, FAIA
2018 LeRoy S. Troyer, FAIA
2019 – No recipient
2020 Don Sporleder, FAIA

Protocol

Nominations may be submitted by any member of AIA Indiana. However, it is hoped that each section (Northern, Fort Wayne, Southern, and Indianapolis) will officially submit through its president and board the name of at least one nominee each year. Given the number of worthy members who more than meet the state criteria and the fact this award was instituted in 2012 for the first time this year, the selection committee may decide to award more than one gold medal. The selection committee shall consist of: a minimum of three former medal winners; 2020 AIA Indiana President or AIA Indiana Executive Committee member designee; and a representative of the AIA Indiana Young Architects Forum. The committee shall meet in person in a timely fashion to select the winner although former winners may attend via conference call. Nominators are required to provide the selection committee with as comprehensive a submission package as possible. It is recommended the nominee be notified in a timely manner so they may contribute to the assembling of the best submission package that can be submitted.
